When I was picnicking in Georgia, I brought my lunch and expected to meet you, but you did not keep the appointment. I and my "bummers" then hurried over into your "Sovereiga. State," and called; but you were "not at home." I remembered that after you burned Columbia and charged it on us we found you biding away up in Old North Carolina, and you were pleased to complain of the great burden of unsolicited hospitality which we thrust upon you. Since I have thought of you often. It is very good of you now to send me your address. I will, as you suppose, be most happy to dinish the job begun in past years. You're right in saying that I am "the fighting member of the family," Brother John is a fine penman, and you must confess he writes a pointed letter. I will not bring any friends this time, because they will not be necessary; but if you will make your headquarters in any single State till I can catch up with you I shall be much obliged.
